D) TEACHING

I have taught full time since 2006, for about twenty academic years. I usually teach at both the bachelor's and master's level. At the University of Perugia I regularly teach in English International Relations, and Comparative and Global Politics to bachelor's and master's students. Previously, I also taught Political Science, Comparative Politics, and Public Policy Analysis.
Each year I supervise 7-8 (max 10) master and undergraduate theses in political science, international relations, comparative politics, and public policy analysis, totaling around 180 theses to date.
I also teach abroad, typically in the local language, during visiting stays and Erasmus teaching periods (see section E). I deliver PhD courses and have supervised seven PhD theses; I am currently supervising one thesis on the role of emerging technologies in governmental crisis management. I am regularly invited to referee and serve on PhD thesis juries in Italy and abroad.
